Still Midnight (Alex Morrow #1) by Denise Mina
Mina's work is not for everyone. Her vicious, visceral style spews and spills across the page, messy as a first draft until you notice the control and subtlety hiding under the anger and violence.

Still Midnight, By Denise Mina | The Independent
Denise Mina bagged the John Creasey prize for best first crime novel for her blistering debut Garnethill (1998), but many a promising career has withered on the vine.

STILL MIDNIGHT by Denise Mina | Kirkus Reviews
Mina trades the glum intensity of her exposés of Glasgow's seamy side (Slip of the Knife, 2007, etc.) for a police procedural that reveals strikingly similar results.
