The induction of fibronectin in lymph nodes is effected by tumor cells forming a special part of the extracellular matrix. The multifunctional fibronectin molecule serves as a mediator between tumor cells and fibroblasts, furthering the formation of tumor stroma. This volume also contains a comprehensive survey of primary immunodeficiency syndromes and their nodal manifestations, reference being made to the most recent immunological knowledge.

On the other hand, all the lymph nodes of an organism join in a uniform function effected by highly differentiated structures. Volume 84 of Current Topics in Pathology presents our current knowledge about the structure and reaction patterns of this "secondary" lymphoid organ. Despite our original intention to publish all the contributions in one book, it became necessary to divide them

This second volume reports on the reaction patterns of lymph nodes in neoplastic and immunodeficient diseases. Based on the contents of volume 1, it presents a detailed survey of lymph node structures and their cellular components under these conditions. The patterns of nodal reactions to the development and spread of cancer have recently been investigated and discussed by several authors

Lymph Nodes with Specific Reaction Patterns - UMDNJ

IN the previous section, we looked at benign normal lymph nodes and, in enlarged nodes, their non-specific reaction patterns of follicular and paracortical hyperplasia and sinus histiocytosis. In this section we will examine common, benign, specific reaction patterns that enable us to identify the cause of a lymph node's enlargement.
